

TROUBLES OF THE ANNENBERGS

Lawyer Littleton Appointed to Straighten Out the Tangle.

Justice Jenks of the Supreme Court has appointed Lawyer M. W. Littleton to straighten out the tangle which exists in the business and domestic affairs of Max Annenberg, his brother, Moses Annenberg and the latter's wife, Fannie Annenberg.

The three have been conducting a furniture store at 92 Graham avenue. Max has sued to dissolve the copartnership, and has had Solomon Annenberg appointed receiver, making several allegations which impugn the good faith of Moses and his wife. He says that Moses was to draw out $25 a week, but that he drew out $275 with which he bought diamond earrings for his wife, and other sums, for which proper accounting was not made.

The plaintiff further asserts that his brother bought a lot of furniture for the purpose of getting the affairs of the company into such a condition that a failure would be necessary and also profitable. Moses says that all the trouble arose over a young woman employed in the store and whom Max wanted to discharge.

He says that Max tried to forcibly remove the young woman from a chair in which she was sitting, and that when he (Moses) took the girl's part, Max threatened to throw an ink stand at him. Moses says that after this incident Max tried to injure the business of the store.
